THE STORY

Some people keep their storms behind a practiced smile. They give the room what it expects while whole worlds stay locked within, and the deepest waters are often the ones that look calmest from the shore. Loving them means accepting that we cannot always reach the harbor — only stay close until the weather turns. How do you shelter someone who has learned to hide in plain view?

SONG STRUCTURE

Harbors in Bad Weather

VERSE

You never said just what you'd seen
Or where you'd drifted in between
You wore that silence like a veil
And hid the raw parts off the rail

I read the stillness in your face
But felt the tug beneath the grace
You gave the room a practiced grin
While keeping whole worlds tucked within

INSTRUMENTAL GROOVE

VOCAL HOOK

Some hearts are harbors in bad weather
Holding charts no one can read

Some hearts are harbors in bad weather
With their gates locked tight at sea

INSTRUMENTAL DROP

BREAKDOWN

I thought I knew
How far a truth can go...

Then I found you , I try to grow

CHORUS

Some hearts are harbors in bad weather,
hidden plain and blue
With salt on every locked-up clue
And all the ones who move like kings at the edge of the border
Can still be the ones with the deepest water , under

EXTENDED INSTRUMENTAL DROP

FINAL VOCAL

I can't promise you the shore
Or name what all this water's for
But when the dark starts pulling down
I'll stay until we turn around

OUTRO

Some hearts are oceans...

Hidden in plain view.
