THE STORY

> Joy can find us at the edge of an evening we never expected to remember. Someone reaches for us, we answer, and suddenly the hours feel generous. There is a particular freedom in sharing happiness before we know what to call it, while one more moment together still seems easy to ask for. Who says a night has to belong to you before it can become part of your story?

LYRICS

One More Song

VERSE 1

Someone's cousin's getting married.
Neither one of us knows why we're here.
You spilled the champagne on my jacket.
I said don't worry, it's not dear.

PRE-CHORUS

The band played something slow and older.
Nobody else got up to dance.
You held your hand out like you meant it.
I took the chance.

CHORUS

One more song before we go.
One more song, then let them know.
We crashed a wedding, made it ours.
One more song, we've still got hours.

VERSE 2

The bride caught us still dancing later.
She laughed and asked how long we'd known.
You said since roughly half past seven.
I said longer, felt like I'd have known.

PRE-CHORUS

They cleared the floor for one last number.
Everybody found their coats to leave.
You pulled me back before I'd taken
I didn't need to be relieved.
I didn't need to be relieved.

CHORUS

One more song before we go.
One more song, then let them know.
We crashed a wedding, made it ours.
One more song, we've still got hours.

OUTRO

Whose wedding was it?
Doesn't matter now.
