THE STORY

> Hope has a playful way of disguising itself as coincidence. We begin to notice patterns, make room in our days, and arrive with expectations we have yet to admit. Beneath the teasing lives a tender possibility: perhaps the other person has been looking forward to this too. How many chance encounters does it take before we admit we are choosing to meet?

LYRICS

Same Corner, Tuesday

VERSE 1

Third time this month at the same corner.
You order black, I still get two.
You said this city's getting smaller.
I said maybe it's just you.

PRE-CHORUS

You checked your watch like you were leaving.
You didn't leave for twenty more.
I wasn't counting, only noticing.
You always find the same back door.

CHORUS

Funny how we keep running into this.
Funny how the same street finds us twice.
Maybe it's not the city playing tricks.
Maybe it's just us, rolling the dice.

VERSE 2

You showed up at my friend's exhibit.
I didn't know you'd still be asked.
You said you came to see the paintings.
I said the paintings weren't that vast.

PRE-CHORUS

We ended up outside there talking.
Two hours passed like twenty more.
I wasn't planning on this happening.
You smiled like you'd seen this before.

CHORUS

Funny how we keep running into this.
Funny how the same street finds us twice.
Maybe it's not the city playing tricks.
Maybe it's just us, rolling the dice.

OUTRO

Same corner, Tuesday.
I'll get there first this time.
